SEEKS FEVER CASES

U. S. Health Officers Locating "Walking Typhoid."

ORIGIN OF ALL EPIDEMICS

Infection Said to Be More Likely Than from Milk or Water-Results Shown by Experience of Prof. Koch in German City-Co-operation Asked in Washington.

In spite of the many sanitary advantages possessed by our city, it has never been able permanently to rid itself of typhoid fever. Every autumn, the disease declines as the cold weather comes on; every summer the number of cases increases, be ginning about July, and rising to a maximum in August. For many years the water was considered the principal source of infection, and one improve ment after another was introduced, culminating about two years ago in the construction, of an up-to-date and efficient filtration plant. Still, the regular periodical rise and fall of the fever persisted, unaffected so far by the filtration of the water. In the summer of 1906, the Surgeon General of the Public Health and Marine Hospital Service, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury the District, detailed a board for the in vestigation of the cause of the disease in Washington. Infected milk was shown to be responsible for a considerable part of the total number of cases, and a still larger percentage was due to contact in fection or could not be traced by any means at the command of the board Now, contact infection means simply tha the patient has caught the disease from another patient, or in other words, that the organism causing the disease has been transferred direct from the sick to the healthy persons.

Contact Cases Different.

In America, the element of "contagion" in the transmission of typhoid fever has not been fully appreciated, because in the country, as a whole, there have been so many cases opviously due to infected milk and water that the recognition of the "contact" cases is made difficult.

The importance of "contact" was em an attraction. Leaving Cape Henry at health officers with the Public Health and Marine Hospital Service in 1905 by Dr. Victor C. Vaughan, of the University of Michigan. He had been one of the in 1898 to investigate the origin and spread of typhoid fever in the United States military camps during the Spaninvestigations it was shown that per per cent of the total cases studied amon

In Germany, where in many cities the water is good and the milk boiled, it has been shown that the disease is transmitted aimost entirely by "contact." that the Germans have an easy task in eradicating the disease from these places; but in spite of German skill and scientific thoroughness, with a paternal government supporting the sanitarian

Koch Goes to Inquire,

Such was the situation at Trier when in the year 1902, Prof. Robert Koch was ordered to that place to investigate the cause of the persistence of the disease. At the time of his arrival, the local health officers knew of eight patients ill with typhoid fever. Koch established his laboratory and put his assistants at work in it, and detailed others on inspection duty throughout the town. In cases of ill-defined sickness, specimens were exteriological science, and it was found that instead of there being only eight cases in the place, there were seventy-two. When the health officers were in possession of information in the case of only eight widely separated patients, they were unable to fix definitely the sources of the disease, but with full information in connection with seventy-two patients, it was easy to trace the disease from one another. Moreover, here were sixty-four persons suffering from a dangerously comnunicable disease, many of them going about the town unaware of the seriousness of their condition and falling to recognize the fact that they were constant sources of infection to those with whom they came in contact.

"Walking Typhoid" Infectious.

It is well known that one person suffering from "walking typhoid" and comcontribute more to the spread of the disease than a dozen sick patients in bed at their homes, or than a hundred in a Officer Woodward. well regulated hospital.

Washington-Sunset Route.

California is unlike any other land un der the sun. It cannot fairly be judged by comparison with any other. Its history is unique. Beginning in a delirium of excitement about gold, and gathering adventurers from all lands, it has in half a century become a great Commonwealth, peaceful, law-ablding, full of the institutions of learning and of religion, and with developed resources which have given it ame among the nations of the world. Its size is unusual. It is equal to all New England, with New York and Ohlo added. It has a wast mountain system, yet its central valley is one of the great agricultural basins of the world. imate is one of the softest known to the emperate zone. It is almost the only land under heaven where climatic condi-tions are not subject to the law of latitude. The excursions of the Washington Sunset Route to California are delightful. A. J. Poston, G.
